About the Workshop:

The pandemic has forced the educational institutions to remain closed for conduct of class in person for most part of the current academic session which has adversely affected the learning of undergraduate students. Teaching-learning through online mode has gained much importance during these trying times and has become the means of communication between academicians themselves and also with the students. But despite best efforts, due to lack of resources and loss of time, a large number of students might have found it difficult to connect and thus avail the benefit of these online programmes. IAPT has always come forward to guide physics students to help them advance in their careers by organizing a multitude of activities since its inception. As a part of IAPT's Birth - Centenary Celebrations of its founder, Professor D. P. Khandelwal, RC-4 (U.P.) is organizing a one-week National Revision Workshop in Physics: Nurturing Students during Pandemic (NRWP-2021) through online mode. The aim is to brush up undergraduate students' understanding of important concepts in physics. Experts from different fields in physics will share their knowledge and experience with students through lectures and experimental demonstrations. The organizing committee is hopeful of achieving its goals through large-scale participation of student community.
